They say your freshman year is probably the most memorable year, however, that is not always a good thing. The class of 2013 has always thought they could do anything and never mess up, until now. Here are some perils of being a freshman:

The class of 2013 has had many problems just on the first day. Many freshmen fell down the stairs, or lost their contact lenses. Something just wasn't right, even lockers wouldn't open. In the cafeteria, it was terrible because freshmen forgot their lunch numbers, slipped on ice and didn't know where to get their food. After lunch, freshmen were late to their classes because they couldn't find the bathroom. Luckily, most teachers didn't count them tardy because it was the first day.

On the second day, most freshmen thought there wouldn't be any problems, but there were more. Cell phones that were brought to school were either lost or confiscated. Nearly all of the freshman student planners were lost. Although these events may sound bad, none compare to a student walking into the office barefoot, looking for her shoes.

Everything seemed fairly easy for the veteran upperclassmen. Lunch numbers, classrooms and bathrooms were all a breeze. Some tried to get away with the stereotypical hazing, but the teachers caught them in the act. Bonds between freshmen and upperclassmen have been made, let's hope those last throughout the year.

It's still fun being a freshman and talking to the upperclassmen. Seeing all the new teachers and meeting up with friends has put a smile on every freshman's face. The first few days have been tough, but that's how it's supposed to be. We just can't wait till we're upperclassmen.
